

Programme Characteristics

Emphasis on Classical Knowledge in Chinese Medicine

Chinese medicine is a medical system comprising unique philosophies in the nature and human body. With our strong emphasis on the classical Chinese medicine knowledge, students will develop deep insight in traditional Chinese culture and master clinical reasoning skills in TCM. In the meantime, by equipping students with knowledge in modern medicine and research skills, students are expected not only to inherit the classical theories and traditional mode of thought in Chinese medicine, but also to make innovations in the modern world.

Integration of Theory into Practice

To enhance the integration of theoretical knowledge in Chinese Medicine and clinical skills, the School introduces clinical training throughout the six-year curriculum. Students are required to start clinical attachments as early as the first year of the study, and end with one and a half year of continuous internship at affiliated clinics in Hong Kong and hospitals in China. During the study period, different learning objectives and clinical training tasks have been designed in catering for students' learning ability at different stages. Students are expected to gradually develop a good understanding in principles of different TCM diagnosis and treatment methods, and get familiar with handling common clinical cases, emergency cases and cases of different specialties. They will gain a strong foundation for their future career development after completion of the programme.

Well-developed Network to Broaden Students' Vision

The School has established a collaboration network with local, Mainland China and overseas partners, by which benefit our students in many aspects. As a key member in Faculty of Medicine, our students are fully supported in pre-clinical training by the Faculty, and students will experience quality and inspiring education through meeting and sharing with professionals from different health care sectors. Apart from the self-established teaching clinics, the School also works closely with Chinese medicine clinics and teaching hospitals in local and Mainland China to provide various clinical practice and employment opportunities for students.

Programme Structure

The Programme consists of two parts: the Pre-clinical Programme and the Clinical Programme

Pre-clinical Programme (4.5 years)

The pre-clinical programme extends over four and a half academic years. Students are required to complete courses including subjects in basic medical and life sciences, Chinese medical concepts and theories, Chinese medicine classics, various specialties in Chinese medicine, and Chinese medicine research methodologies.

Clinical Programme (1.5 years)

The last one and a half years of the study are devoted to clinical training in a hospital setting. In addition to the training in hospitals, students may also conduct practicum at out-patient clinics of Chinese medicine in Hong Kong for a certain period of time in order to gain practical experience as general practitioners.
